

CELEBRATE!

Two reasons for celebration this week: Margaret Wheatly kindly agreed to write the short foreword to our new book, Dialogue Education, which will be published in the Spring of 2003. She is a kindred soul and will bring her fame and good name to our small venture.

And—I have finished the draft of the manuscript that goes to the publisher on November 14th. If you knew how hard that was! Anyone out there know how to maintain formatting in Word when you copy a file? Ugh!

The contributors (all 28 of them) will review it next week and get it back to me with their suggestions and amendments to their own chapters.

I really did do my last workshop on Tuesday at Lesley University. No more! The work goes on well and worthily without me. I cannot say this is my last book... inspiration and my sweet Muse may know otherwise. But I hope you will drink a good wine with me tonight to celebrate the completion of the first, final draft of our 2003 publication!

Now it is time to settle by the fireplace with a good book, and that good wine! See you there!
